Ludwig Edinger, is absorbed at present in the question: "Have fish a memory?" and he has written to the Lancet to inyite information on the subject. It may seem a trivial question and the brain of a fish may be a very small quantity, but a great many little thing in nature are worth studying, and even if the problem cannot be solved it will give a good opening for fish stories. Every disciple of Izaak Walton will have something to say and ancedotes to tell to back his opinions. There are no fish in the neighborhood of Fleet street, and, therefore, we cannot try experiments, and the only contribution we can make to the discussion is to ask why anglers have to be so particular about the mate and color of their artificial flies if fish have no memory. If fish have vision without a sense of memory surely they would never discriminate between a May fly and a red spinner and anglers would be saved s lot of trouble.
